Emerald Plants Reading Activity

Name: _____ Class Period: _____ Date: _____

Directions: Read the passage and use the information you've learned to answer the questions below using complete sentences.

Emerald plants are rooted to the bottom of a water body, but their stems, leaves and flowers are all above the water. Bulrush, cat-tail, and duck potato are some examples of emersed plants. Emerald plants live and grow from the water's edge out to where the water is 1 to 3 meters deep (about 3 to 10 feet). They provide habitat (places to live and hide) and food (such as seeds and leaves) for fish and other animals. The underwater parts of emersed plants provide places to hide and rest for small animals such as crayfish, tadpoles, and minnows. These animals in turn serve as prey for bigger fish that people like to catch, such as largemouth bass. Emerald plant habitat also serves as a feeding or resting area for birds, ducks, frogs, and raccoons. These plants also help reduce shoreline erosion by absorbing the impact energy of water waves as they come to the shore.

When emersed plants grow close together or in clumps they can cause problems. Some emersed plants, such as cattails, can become so thick that they can prevent access to the shore, or even stop the flow of water. This can cause algae growth and a loss of dissolved oxygen in the water, which makes the water unhealthy for fish and other underwater creatures. Too much growth of either native or non-native emersed plants can also make boat channels narrower or even block them, which makes it dangerous for people to drive boats through.

Emerald Plants Reading Activity (UE/MS) – answer in complete sentences.

1. How would you describe an emersed plant?
2. Name two examples of an emersed plant.
3. What functions do emersed plants perform?
